PG Exhibits earns bronze in environmental design

DENVER – September 14, 2007 – The Art Directors Club of Denver last week awarded PG Exhibits and Montano-Solaria and Associates a bronze medal for their work on a US Geological Surveys exhibit.

The team was honored in environmental design for their high-tech display that incorporated real-time seismic activity from around the globe.

“We used a combination of graphic imaging and three-dimensional structure to draw people into the exhibit,” said Rod Pacheco, creative director for PG Exhibits. “The goal was to illustrate the constant geologic activity worldwide. The result was a live demonstration that incorporated 32 television screens, seismographs and a number of clocks from around the world.”

The Art Directors Club of Denver is a local non-profit creative organization focused on strengthening the creative community. Founded in 1955, it is committed to providing the creative industry in Colorado with a professional competition that measures and rewards creative excellence within the design industry.

PG Exhibits adds this honor to 13 Business Marketing Awards that it has received in the past few years for its exceptional exhibit design work.
